

It's Arts Advocacy Season!

From the Executive Director

With this month's edition of ArtNotes we introduce some of the proposals we have submitted to our government partners. We will continue to provide information on how artists and arts organizations throughout the region can endorse these proposals for increased arts funding and be effective arts advocates all year long.

We also want to let you know that our efforts in the private sector are in full swing, too! By now you've probably heard that our workplace giving program has a new name – "Work for Art." We're working diligently to secure new workplace giving sites in 2006. We thank Virginia Willard and the staff and board of Northwest Business for Culture & the Arts for their continued support and enthusiastic assistance in building this vital program that generates money and awareness for local arts organizations. To find out more about why funding the arts is everyone's business, visit www.workforart.org.

Speaking of Work for Art, we're sad to announce the departure of Sara Gummere, who has coordinated the program so successfully over the past two years. Sara's next adventures will take her to some exciting parts of the globe over the next several months. While we would prefer to go with her, we send her off with heartfelt appreciation for all of her efforts and our wishes for safe and exciting travels. Meanwhile, we are delighted to welcome Kathryn Jackson, who takes over these Work for Art coordination tasks. Kathryn comes to us with tremendous experience in organizational consulting, project design and management. She was the founding president and artistic director of Kalakendra, the Society for the Performing Arts of India, from 1987-1999.

Kathryn can be reached at kjackson@racc.org. We hope you'll join us in welcoming her to the Regional Arts & Culture Council!

Arts advocacy is among the most important activities conducted and coordinated by the Regional Arts & Culture Council. Throughout the year, RACC works with the local arts community to communicate the importance of arts and culture in our daily lives, and to articulate the need for increased support from both the public and private sectors. Those efforts kick into high gear each spring as local governments begin to consider their programs and expenditures for next year's budgets, and we invite the local arts community to understand the extent to which local government supports the arts, to reacquaint themselves with what it means to be an arts advocate, and to work together in support of a strong local arts and culture community.

In February, RACC submitted funding proposals to the City of Portland and Multnomah County for the fiscal year starting July 1, 2006 and ending June 30, 2007. Citizens will have several opportunities to review and comment upon these proposals this spring.

Working with Multnomah County Chair Diane Linn and Multnomah County Commissioner Maria Rojo de Steffey, RACC has submitted a request on behalf of the local arts and culture community totaling $141,847 – a 3.5% cost of living increase over last year's allocation of $137,050. These funds would be distributed to artists and arts organizations through RACC's existing grant programs, while also providing support for RACC's arts education grants, technical assistance programs, web-based resources, and this free newsletter. In addition, the Chair's office has suggested that we submit a new request to restore RACC's arts education activities in the Multnomah County Schools Uniting Neighborhoods (SUN) Program, which specifically addresses the service gaps of many low income families and at-risk youth in our region through extended-day arts activities including a variety of cultural workshops and bilingual activities for students and their families.

Working with Portland Mayor Tom Potter and Portland City Commissioner Sam Adams, RACC has proposed general funding from the City in the amount of $2,446,023. This request represents a 6.1% increase over last year's allocation, based on the Transient Lodging increase (hotel/motel occupancy rate) of the same percentage, as stipulated in the City's contract with RACC. Like the County's investment, this sum will be returned to the local arts community through a variety of grants, arts education activities, technical assistance programs, and information services. RACC proposes an additional funding allocation of $500,000 specifically designed to bring the local government's share of financing for local arts organizations closer to the national average of 5%. (Currently, the average local arts organization receives 1.7% of their total revenue from RACC.) City Hall has also requested that RACC create a process and protocol for considering the extraordinary one-time needs and opportunities of our local arts organizations so that City Commissioners do not have to consider those requests themselves without established criteria; that program would be seeded with an additional $400,000 annual investment from the City. Lastly, RACC is working to restore many of its technical assistance and grantmaking programs to culturally diverse, geographically disparate arts organizations, and has requested $100,000 from the City to be leveraged with additional support from the private sector.

Details about these proposals are available on our website, and RACC's proposals to Clackamas County, Washington County, and Metro are also due soon. We invite you to visit www.racc.org/advocacy often throughout the spring to find out more about the status of these and other funding requests, and as we have done in the past, RACC will issue Calls to Action through our email network when there are specific opportunities to support arts and culture through citizen involvement forums and town hall budget meetings. One important date to mark in your calendar is the City of Portland Public Budget Forum at location TBA on Friday, April 7.

Successful advocacy depends on getting our message across to the people who make these funding decisions and citizen advocates can help. RACC will be working over the next several weeks to develop clear and succinct messages, to disseminate these messages throughout the arts community, and to target the efforts of the local arts community in places where it can be most effective in garnering increased support for arts and culture.

In the meantime, make sure that you are inviting our elected officials – Mayors, City Commissioners, County Commissioners, and Metro Councilors – to all of your performances and exhibitions this spring and throughout the year. We find that personal invitations work best, and it is entirely appropriate for you to offer to personally accompany them throughout the duration of their visit to your venue. We hope that everyone will be involved in showing our elected officials how the combined efforts of artists and arts organizations in our community are supporting the economy, driving tourism, improving our children's education, and enhancing the quality of life for Portland area residents.

For a complete list of the elected officials within RACC's service area and regular updates on RACC's advocacy efforts, visit www.racc.org/advocacy. From there you can also download the Advocacy and Government Affairs Handbook for Artists, Volunteers and Staff of Arts and Cultural Organizations – an important guide to help artists and arts organizations be effective advocates for the arts.

New Murals in Our Community

The Public Art Murals Program, administered by RACC, celebrates its first year. The first mural proposals went before the Public Art Advisory Committee (PAAC) in April 2005. In the last year, five murals have been completed through the program and four more have been approved. New mural proposals come before the PAAC every month. Look for these exciting examples of public art popping up in your community! To learn more about the Mural Program visit www.racc.org/murals.
