Grants on the Horizon

RACC is pleased to announce that on May 2, 2005 applications will be available for Project and Professional Development grants. We urge artists and arts organizations to visit www.racc.org/grants to learn more about these upcoming opportunities. We hope many will apply.

Project Grants provide funding to artists and organizations that offer specific art programs or presentations to the general public. The three project grant categories are – Artistic Focus, Neighborhood Arts, and Arts in Schools. Applicants may apply in up to two different categories for projects occurring in 2006.

A sampling of Project Grants for this year include: Artistic Focus: Bill Will: A Retrospective at the Art Gym; Institution: Rose Bond (a new animated film); Frozen Music: Third Angle New Music Ensemble (exploring the relationship between music and architecture in Portland). Neighborhood Arts: Adventures in Ill-Care: Bump in the Road Theater (contemporary social issues); Fostering the Arts in Public Housing: Social Services of Clackamas County (arts workshops for residents). Arts in Schools: Theatre Alive: Grout School (theatre for students with little or no arts programs); Les Enfants d'Icare: Pendulum Aerial Dance Theatre (French-American International school students aerial performance). Deadline for Individuals: 8/15/05; for Organizations: 8/22/05 5pm

Professional Development Grants assist artists and arts administrators with opportunities to bring them to another level artistically and/or to improve their business management skills. Deadline: 10/10/05.

Through these competitive grant programs RACC seeks to enhance and enrich artistic activity throughout the Portland region; bring new energy and creative ideas to our communities; and support the work of a wide array of talented artists and organizations. Our lives would be dreary without you!

Peggy Kendellen, RACC Public Art Manager

In December 2003, four Portland artists — Jason Greene, Mary Josephson, Cynthia Lahti, and Henk Pander — embarked on an artist-in-residency adventure with Portland Fire & Rescue (PF&R) as part of RACC's public art residency program, intersections. The focus of the program is to link the “work of art” and the “art of work.”

The project was funded by percent for art funds generated from a General Obligation Bond that financed the remodeling of 23 existing stations and construction of eight new ones. Some funds were set aside for site specific works at new stations. The remaining dollars were earmarked for two-dimensional works for stations undergoing remodeling. The selection panel's original idea was to purchase existing artwork with imagery reflective of the PF&R culture and rotate those works amongst fire stations. However, following station visits, they decided instead to set up an artist-in-residency program with several stations so that there would be more interaction between artists and firefighters. The residencies evolved in ways that no one anticipated, least of all the participants.

Each artist spent time with five to six stations. Over the course of one year, they recorded their impressions in drawings, paintings and diaries. The residencies were remarkable opportunities for the artists to witness first hand the daily responsibilities of firefighters. Each artist went on “ride alongs” to numerous fire and emergency calls, and shared meals, experiences and ideas with the firefighters. Mary Josephson wrote: “One of the most important and intriguing aspects of this residency has been the unknown nature of the calls and when they will come; the realization of how the 911 system has become the catch all for a myriad of situations from the dangerous and tragic to the ludicrous and comical.”

MASS, choreographed by Sinead Kimbrell, artistic director of SpugMotion. At Nocturnal, 18th and E. Burnside, 5/5-6. A RACC project grant helped to fund this event. These grants are now available for 2006 projects (See At RACC).

The experience forever changed preconceived notions the artists may have had of what it means to be a firefighter. As Jason Greene wrote, “Any assumptions I had were soon replaced by new understandings. I was surprised to meet such a calm and collected bunch of people who work together so well. Even in the face of random emergencies, the firefighters exude a cool steadiness, and each knows exactly what to do without hesitation.”

Cynthia Lahti succinctly summarized her experience: “It was a great honor to be allowed to observe and create artwork for the fire stations. They save lives. That is their job, everyday. A firefighter told me ‘we clean up the world’s messes.’ They do it with care and humility. They are strong and kind. They are all heroes.”

Henk Pander kept an extensive diary of his experiences with five stations. An excerpt from February 6, 2004, 8:00pm: “The interior of the house was dark and unkempt with piles of furniture, garbage, rubble, and clothes. A haggard man sat on a couch, covering his crotch. He was motionless. I thought he was dead. Medics and firemen massaged the man, an IV bag hanging from the light fixture.... I started drawing and in quick succession made four drawings of the man.... There was a young boy, the man’s son, frantically playing a video game standing in the middle of a pile of broken furniture. A policewoman walked in and asked me if I was family. ‘I am an artist working for the Fire Bureau,’ I said....I shot more film of the man being carried out and lifted into the ambulance. Apparently there was still a pulse. In the excitement I ran out of film and rewind. I opened up the camera only to discover that the film had not completely rewind.... I think I ruined it. Stupid, since it was exactly what I was looking for for a painting.”

Works completed by the artists during the residency are on exhibit at the Portland Fire & Rescue headquarters, 55 SW Ash, through May 27. Visitors must enter the building on Ash Street, take the elevator to the 3rd floor, and request a security badge to see the art. Following the exhibition, the work will be permanently installed at each of the 22 participating stations.

New friendships, unfamiliar experiences, altered perspectives on life, and untested directions in their work were outcomes of the venture. The artists reluctantly ended the residency a year later, yet carried with them a deeply felt respect for the firefighters they met and for the work that they do. They now have a wealth of memories, drawings and photographs to draw upon for future work.

Members of the selection panel were Battalion Chief Duane Bray, artists Christine Clark and Deborah Horrell, curator Prudence Roberts, and Dick Ragland from the City’s Bureau of General Services. For more information about intersections contact Peggy Kendellen, pkendellen@racc.org.

The Big Tree Comes in Upside-Down !

The Big Tree Sculpture by Fernanda D'Agostino (pictured at lower left) was installed in the New Columbia housing redevelopment, off N. Columbia Blvd. in North Portland last month. The upside-down installation of this 30-foot tall London Plane tree is part of the first public art program for an affordable housing development in Portland. Walsh Construction provided significant in-kind services to move and site the tree. The formerly living tree was felled in 2003 when construction began on New Columbia. It has been treated for decay and is being "re-planted" upside down as a piece of whimsical public art in McCoy Park at New Columbia, which will open its doors May 3 with a Homecoming Celebration for the first new residents moving back. RACC has worked with the Portland Housing Authority to help fund and administer the public art at New Columbia.
